

“Working From Home May Decrease Your Company’s Overhead, But Cost Your Company Everything If Cybersecurity Is Overlooked”

Focusing on cyber security when the workforce has already been sent home to telecommute is already too late. While companies spend significant dollars investing in the latest technology to enhance operations and sales, many of those same companies fail to invest in the first line of defense in securing the technologies that enable their mission. As many more companies now realize the benefits of allowing a significant portion of their workforce to telecommute, they may be realizing that they have not prepared their employees to operate securely on the Internet in a way that protects company systems and intellectual property. Balancing speed of business with good cyber security practices is essential in today’s high-tech environment. Companies that pay attention to technology and consider their workforce as part of a multi-layered cyber defense strategy will have the edge over those that do not.

During the presentation, Bonnie Stith will discuss the value of developing effective multi-layered cyber security programs.