Director of Warehouse Operations & Building Management
Turn 14 Distribution

Jim Larkin is Turn 14 Distribution's Director of Warehouse Operations and Building Management. His intense focus on precision and operations accuracy began long before he came to Turn 14 Distribution, as he brings nearly three decades of experience in logistics and distribution to the leadership team.

Jim began his career as a product assembler for Hope Industries, a company which manufactured medical equipment, and in short order worked his way in a position supervising the manufacturing line, then became the building manager responsible for all facets of operation for the company's facility. He subsequently took a similar position in the medical field, where he continued to hone his talents for maximizing production and efficiency.

In 2010, Jim brought his skills and knowledge to Turn 14 Distribution to help support the company's sustained growth. With customer satisfaction at the forefront of his decision-making process, Jim assisted Turn 14 Distribution's rise to prominence in the performance parts distribution marketplace. Jim's daily goal is to enhance the customer experience through warehouse sign and process improvements, which has been instrumental to the company's impressive expansion. Jim's manufacturing and production background, combined with his experience in developing successful teams, has helped to position Turn 14 Distribution for continued prosperity.

During his tenure with the Turn 14 Distribution, he has directed the company's growth operationally, from a single-location small warehouse environment to today's multi-facility distribution network. Each of these facilities are fully automated and ultramodern designed to serve Turn 14 Distribution's global customers from three locations across the United States.
